

ISI Honored as a Dallas Business Journal Best Place to Work for the Third Time

[Dallas, TX – July 21, 2011] - The Dallas Business Journal's Best Places to Work, now in its ninth year, is a highly sought-after designation with hundreds of companies competing for the honor. The 52 North Texas-based companies making this year's list represent diverse businesses large and small, public and private, all sharing a focus on employee engagement with an emphasis on job satisfaction, a positive working environment, and community service. Companies that have earned the distinction of a Best Places to Work will be recognized at Dallas Business Journal Awards Luncheon on September 22 and in the Dallas Business Journal Best Places to Work Special Publication on September 23.

Winning companies are selected by the aggregate score of employee surveys as administered by the independent research firm Quantum Workplace. Companies that achieved best-practice scores were selected as the Dallas Business Journal's Best Places to Work. Best practice scores are determined by national industry standards and vary by company size: small companies (10 to 100 North Texas employees), survey score of 90 or higher; midsize companies (101 to 500 employees), survey score of 87 or higher; large companies (501 or more local employees), survey score of 85 or higher.

The awards celebration is a boisterous event where the company rankings will be revealed, counting down to the number one honoree in each of three categories: Small, Midsize and Large, based on North Texas employee counts. It's a great way for honoree companies to bring the whole team and celebrate success. It's also a great event for others to connect with the top employers in North Texas.
